The diversity of exteriors adds to the unique look of this special community.

— The Start —

During the 1920's, Joseph Barness truly symbolized the optimism that was America. Amidst the gently rolling meadows of Bucks County, he built his home, cultivated his farmland, and savored the fulfillment of his vision of the American Dream.

— The Foundation —

He imagined the harmonious blending of the land and its people, a mosaic of flourishing towns, prosperous farms, and comfortable homes equipped with modern conveniences. First he built one house, and then another. With the purchase of 80 acres in Bucks County, he planted the seeds of The Barness Organization.

With impeccable attention to detail, Joseph Barness built homes one by one, overseeing every element, striking the essential balance between quality and value. His son, Herbert Barness, joined him and then spent 50 years building homes, creating neighborhoods, and being a good neighbor. With vision and commitment, he led the family business in new directions.

Slowly, carefully, strategically, Herbert Barness guided the firm's growth, adding townhomes, office buildings, commercial complexes, apartments and other multi-family housing, and other types of real estate development to the single-family portfolio. Property management services were provided as well.

— The Detail —

Today, The Barness Organization, headed by Herbert's daughter, Lynda Barness, continues the tradition and legacy of the generations that came before. Respecting the land and its people is a cornerstone of The Barness

Organization in its third generation.

Chairman of the Board Murray Hirshorn, Vice President for Construction Robert Brown, and Operations Manager Andrew Kaye join Lynda in embracing the original optimism of Joseph Barnes and the visionary ideals of Herbert Barnes.

Today, the legacy continues with new communities and concepts. The Barnes Organization has added active adult housing, with a series of Legacy Oaks communities, offering lifestyle, convenience and an exciting atmosphere to fill the demands of those over 55.

—The Finish—

There is a special understanding that defines the Barnes building legacy. We're not just sticks and bricks," Lynda Barnes explains. "We listen carefully to what our buyers want. We understand that they are buying the dream of a lifetime and that we have been invited to share in it. That level of confidence inspires us every day." Murray Hirshorn concurs, noting, "The most important accomplishment in this business is to maintain a high level of quality. This is the goal of each person in our organization who is involved in the homebuilding process."

—The Commitment—

The Barnes Organization continues to build as it always has...with loyalty, craftsmanship, responsibility and respect. These are characteristics that have defined the Barnes family's history of homebuilding. Promises, commitment, and follow-through...a legacy of quality and caring. This has been the focus for over seven decades and three generations. The Barnes Organization is proud of its homebuilding traditions and is ready for the new millennium.
